of estrogens in the circulation and their presence in the skin]. Estrogens are essential for both women's and men's health. There are differences between estrogens in blood and in skin. In the blood, estrogens have been proved to protect the cardiovascular system, to lower the risk of cancer and to prevent osteoporosis. Estrogens are widely present in the circulation in the form of estradiol (E2), estriol (E3), estrone (E1), estetrol (E4), estradiol sulfate (E2S) and estriol sulfate (E3S). The highest levels of estrogens can be found in the postmenopausal period, whereas in the early menopause the concentration of estrogens decreases progressively with age, even though the levels of estradiol still remain higher in the postmenopausal period than in the premenopause. The level of estrogens in the circulation depends on the intensity of the stimulation of the adrenal cortex and the use of exogenous estrogens, as well as on the hepatic metabolism. In the skin, estrogens are present both as precursor and metabolite; the main forms are E1, E2 and E2S. The levels of estrogens in the skin are significantly higher than in the blood, the difference being due to a lag time of 7 days in the latter. The cut
